GREENWICH VILLAGE, THEN AND NOW
Frances Chase

On holiday trips to New York, I have dipped down into lower Manhattan to catch glimpses of Greenwich Village, to enjoy its quaintness, to breathe its literary and artistic atmosphere, to make fleeting visits to its many studios and antique shops. But this past summer, 1953, I truly "made" the Village. I rambled the area in leisurely and studious fashion, reviewing its interesting history. I became a part of that unique place with a glorious past, a perplexing present and an obviously doomed future.

For unfortunately, that charming space, which has been a workshop for creative genius and a haven for artistic productivity, now howls with the clamor of screeching drills and hammering sledges. The streets are cluttered with mortar troughs and lumber, with tar and paint, with whirling dust and debris. The shop windows are smeared with grime, often broken and boarded. Frequently a stuffed pillow supplants a missing window pane. There is a strange mixture of the grotesque as the Village clings to its inspirational past although it is no longer visited by independent workers as a haunt for high adventure.

It was my good fortune to be able to occupy a studio apartment in the Pen and Brush Club House on Tenth Street, in a building that had been one of the Treadwell mansions. It was a fourth floor walk-up and in walking up I soon lost my appreciation of those graceful, steep, ivory and mahogany stairs. In the modest little weekly newspaper, The Villager, I found a helpful guide. It aims to keep alive the traditions of the community and carries a two column artist's sketch of some point of interest on the front page of each issue. Providing myself with two years' back issues, I was able to identify scores of the buildings so illustrated. Though many places were dilapidated almost beyond recognition, my eyes saw them in all the glamour of their former time.

There was MacDougall Alley flanked by chimneys and adjacently topped with skylights. There, even yet, was a flickering gas lamp or two. There were the half hidden courtyards hedged in with age old greenery, arbors, trellises, crumbling statues and dried up fountains. There were ancient carved windows and tiny dormers, narrow doors and winding steps to minute cupolas. Came the restaurants, the Pepper Pot, the Beanery, Captain's Table, Aunt Clemmy's and a variety of other eating places famed for their food and also for the celebrities who have dined within their Bohemian atmosphere. Everywhere were beguiling wares that seemed attempting to hold onto the things by which Greenwich Village had been born, had lived and prospered. But everywhere, also, was that certain air of decadency and hopelessness in carrying on the glory.

I found the Marble Cemetery where among the remains rest those of President James Monroe, and the tiny Spanish-Portuguese Cemetery established in 1805 by the Synagogue of Shearith Israel as a burial place for strangers. There was Saint Luke's Chapel where Clement Moore, author of 'Twas the Night before Christmas, served as warden when it was Saint Luke's in the Fields. I found the narrowest house (ten feet wide) where Edna St. Vincent Millay went as a bride and lived while writing some of her best poems. There was the shaded balcony of the Salimagundi House, studio of renowned sculptors; tiny Gay Street where My Sister Eileen came into being, and where the girls had lived; Milligan Place and the Washington Mews; quiet, shady Patchin' Place; the backyard houses; Cherry Lane Theatre; old Merchant House; and the push cart section on Bleecker Street with its odors of salami and spiced sausages.

The Village supports many churches, among them still is the little fieldstone church built on the Peter Stuyvesant Estate; Saint John's with its outdoor altar; Church of the Ascension where President John Tyler was secretly married to Julia Gardner; Grace Church where P. T. Barnum's midget, General Tom Thumb, was married.

Although the original settlement of Greenwich Village was to the west of Washington Square that city square has long been known as the center of the Village and the axis of the free life which overflowed its boundaries. Can you imagine a time when this public square of lower Manhattan was a soggy marsh through which ran bubbling Minetta Brook and that to the west roamed deer, elk and thirty pound wild turkeys? Later, too, that land became a rich plantation where Dutch farmers raised elegant tobacco, which crop came to fatten the purses of such men as Wouten van Twiller. It was that wily Dutch governor who ousted the trusting Indians long before Henry Hudson sailed up the adjacent bay in his ship, the Half Moon.

Came Washington in 1776, and among the many mansions built upon the land, especially the area of Richmond Hill, was the one in which Washington and his men made headquarters. From this same estate, too, went Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton to fight the duel which brought death to the latter. The mansion is gone now, but plaques have been erected to commemorate the noble men who slept there.

Washington Square became city property in 1797 for the grim purpose of becoming a Potter's Field. To this day, beneath the cement pavements lie the remains of thousands of persons; paupers, criminals, hastily buried victims of epidemics. (May not some of our missing ancestral links be entombed in this ground!)

A state prison (forerunner of Sing-Sing) was not far from the Square; from it, criminals were brought to the gallows which were erected on the premises, and there they were made public spectacles. Once twenty men were brought at one time to be hanged, and it is said that among the spectators of that gruesome scene was the Marquis de La Fayette.

Washington Square, Tenth Street, and all the Village area has had successive changes -- rural district, Potter's Field, swanky residences of millionaires, gay sailors' retreat, Smug Harbor folk. All those old revolutionary heroes, eminent authors and artists lived again for me as I browsed around in the same places they had moved. I name but a few of the illustrious persons who lived and worked in Greenwich Village - whose former homes I saw and over whose footsteps I must have tramped in my wanderings. They are presented in the same hit-or-miss arrangement as characterizes the Village, and furnishes the pattern of its quaint charm. Within these environs had lived and worked: Edgar Allan Poe, Sydney S. Porter, Samuel L. Clemens, Thomas Edison, Theodore Dreiser, Frank Norris, Willa Cather, Lincoln Steffens, Jack Reed, James Fenimore Cooper, Eugene O'Neill, Walter Lippman, Will Irwin, Allan Seeger, Brete Harte, Max Eastman, George Oram Cook, Susan Gaspell, Ann Harding, Mirian Hopkins, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Eleanor Roosevelt, who still maintains an apartment on the Square.

So we go on with that heterogeneous list of personalities whose names have been emblazoned in American headlines for their contribution to its culture. There had lived Flo Ziegfeld, Margaret Webster, Eva Le Gallienne, Franklin P. Adams, Sinclair Lewis, William Chase, Ogden M. Pleissner, Howard Lindsay, Kate Douglass Wiggins, Lafcadio Hearn, Thomas Paine, John Barrymore, Lillian Gish, Al Jolson and Norma Shearer when she was a hat check girl at one of the local clubs. Here in the Village, too, lived Jennie Jerome, the beautiful American mother of Winston Churchill. Boris Karloff lived here and the puppeteer, Tony Sarg, Fanny Hurst, John Masefield, Jimmie Walker and Betty Compton. The spirits which now dwell there are of these and of scores of others.

On the corner of Eighth Street had been the Marble House, forerunner of the Metropolitan Museum. There now is the black painted hotel called the Brevcoort. To it has come many a royal personage: King Edward the VII and his Queen, Jerome Bonaparte, Jenny Lind, Edith Wharton, Vachell Lindsay and so on, innumerable, the celebrated names could be found on the old registers.

With guide book in hand I saturated myself with historic lore, daily stumbling on some new phase of the area, marveling at the associations of the place, former habitat of thousands of famous persons who lived and worked, joyed and sorrowed, in what has now become a blighted area in the world's largest city. This part of Manhattan which has been the birthplace of American art and its changeful history has deteriorated to the mediocrity of a slum and as such is being uprooted relentlessly. The old town clock erected in 1876 still chimes from its central place within the maze of crooked streets, but each tick of its ancient mechanism sounds the approaching doom of Greenwich Village. Regardless of the noble attempts to hold to past fame and culture, only such vacationing tramps as I, can see much now in that deserted village. Soon modern structures and super highways will have obliterated it completely as they rise to take their place in New York's traffic and sky lines. My ramblings ended with a sigh for the past, but a cheer too for the progress of the present.

ANDREW AND ELIZABETH BOGLE
From Cumberland, Pennsylvania to Blount County, Tennessee
Frances Davis McTeer

Part IV. Ellejoy, Blount County, Tennessee

For Andrew and Elizabeth Bogle, the passing years were measured not so much in weeks and months as in births, deaths, and marriages of their friends and kinfolks, in the gradual recession of Indian alarms as the settlements were extended to the southward, and in increased comfort and prosperity as more land came under cultivation and their lives became permanently identified with the fortunes of their East Tennessee neighbors.

With three grown sons to help on the farm, Andrew's attention could turn to wider responsibilities within the local community. As a young man he had been called upon to fight, against the British and the Indians, in defense of independence and self-government; now, with the same devotion, he must strive to promote law, justice, and fair-dealing for and by his fellow settlers below the French Broad. From Aug. 3, 1795, when he was appointed a Justice of the Peace,¹ he was a member of the Blount County Court and one of the most prominent men in local affairs.² Everywhere he was respected for his clear and honest judgment and his willingness to put the commonweal before personal profit or private pleasure.

True to the tenets of Presbyterianism which he had inherited with his Scotch-Irish blood, Andrew Bogle gave generously of both time and substance for the organization and maintenance of Eusebia Church. No minutes of the church's founding are now in existence, but we do know the first preachings were held out-of-doors within earshot of the Bogle's cabin, land for the burying ground was donated by them, and Joseph Bogle, Sr., was interred in one of the earliest graves.³ Without a doubt, Andrew and his boys wielded axe and saw in the construction of the first log church, while his mother, wife, and daughters entertained the visiting clergy or prepared the sacramental food.

Soon after the dawn of the nineteenth century, Andrew and Elizabeth witnessed the first break in their family circle: they lost a son and gained a daughter when, on April 2, 1801, Hugh Bogle, their second son, just past his twenty-first birthday, was married to Hannah Caldwell.⁴ The young folks set up housekeeping nearby and in the course of time their five children proved a welcome addition to the Bogle clan.⁵

Ten years to the month after Hugh's wedding, another Bogle left the parental roof. On April 23, 1811, Joseph Bogle, the eldest son, born on Shade Mountain, thirty-three years before while his father was in service with the Pennsylvania militia during the Revolution, was married to Mary Glass, who was born Jan. 7, 1786 and died Nov. 17, 1836. Joseph died Aug. 23, 1853; both he and his wife are buried at Eusebia. The seven children of this couple are named in their father's will written in 1849.⁶

Only four months after Joe's departure, in August 1811, the Bogle household had another wedding. Annie, the eldest daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth, was wed to Martin McTeer, born in Pennsylvania Nov. 27, 1771, a son of Robert and Agnes (Martin) McTeer.⁷ This was a marriage of gentle hearts and sober minds; both participants were well past the usual age for wedlock, the bride thirty-six and her husband almost forty years old; both had known the vicissitudes of war and the hazards of the long pioneer trail down the Shenandoah Valley. All the community must have rejoiced at the ceremony which united these two public spirited families both sired by Revolutionary veterans, Comrades-in-Arms in the Pennsylvania militia.⁸ Martin and Ann lived near the other Boggles and McTeers, at Ellejoy, where Martin operated the grist mill which his father had built in 1793.⁹ Their only child, a daughter named Elizabeth for her Grandmother Bogle, was born Sept. 19, 1812 and died Sept. 14, 1825. Thereafter, with no children of their own, the kindness and affection of Martin and Ann McTeer were spent on nieces, nephews, cousins and other young people throughout the neighborhood.¹⁰ Martin McTeer died on Dec. 29, 1853 and his widow Ann (Bogle) McTeer on Oct. 22, 1865.¹¹

In 1812 England was still the traditional enemy, second only to the Indian as the target of American political oratory. British policies of seizure and impressment were unanimously regarded as an insult to the national honor; yet they posed no threat to the persons or properties of the Tennessee settlers. Not so the news of an uprising of the Creeks, inspired by Tecumseh and implemented by Canadian weapons; here was a situation to call forth the roll of the recruiting drums along the southern frontier.

To the best of our knowledge, the only Bogle to answer this summons was James, Andrew's nephew, youngest son of Joseph and Margaret (Houston) Bogle.¹² He served from Oct. 6, 1814 to April 6, 1815, as First Corporal in Capt. Jehu Stephens' Company of "Volunteer Mounted Gunmen from East Tennessee,"¹³ which company, under the command of Brig. Gen. John Coffee, rode¹⁴ to the Gulf of Mexico in support of Jackson's expedition to Mobile, Pensacola and New Orleans.

The Second War with Great Britain, a conflict desired by neither participant, unwisely entered upon, ineptly pursued, was finally concluded in 1815 by the ambivalent Treaty of Ghent. But war or no war, in the valleys of East Tennessee life went on, or death came. On Nov. 29, 1813, "on the same farm on which he first settled,"¹⁵ Andrew Bogle's life came to its appointed end. From the fact that his will was written on the very day of his death, it is presumed that his last illness was brief and unexpected. He was just sixty years old the preceding spring; yet in his lifetime he had seen stirring events; the founding of a new country, the settlement of a new state.

Shortly after his demise, Andrew Bogle's widow, his sons, his daughters, and his other relatives, together with a goodly congregation of his Tennessee neighbors and friends, gathered in Eusebia Churchyard, where in the last hours of a bleak November, the old gentleman was laid to rest beside his parents. His tombstone, still standing, is inscribed "First owner of the soil that now covers his remains."¹⁶

In his will, probated at Maryville on March 20, 1814, Andrew Bogle provided for his wife and five children as follows: "I give to my wife Elizabeth Bogle a decent living in the house I now live in, during her natural lifetime, the young gray mare, and the use of another horse creature until she is fit for use, two cows, all to be maintained by my son Andrew without being any expense to her, one hundred dollars in cash, two featherbeds, bedsteads and furniture, one third of all the kitchen and dresser furniture, all to be at her disposal at her death." To each of his three married children he left "twenty shillings to be paid in trade one year after my decease by my son Andrew." It is evident that he felt these children had already received their share of his estate, for he continues, "I do give to my daughter Polly as near the amount what my daughter Ann got as can be ascertained by my two sons Joseph and Hugh, and to be in the same kind of property and twenty shillings in trade to be paid by my son Andrew." Finally to his youngest son Andrew, who was unmarried and living at home, Andrew Bogle, Sr., left "all my estate real and personal which I have not already bequeathed" including the home place on Ellejoy Creek.

With the death of Andrew Bogle, Sr., the tenancy of the Ellejoy homestead was reduced to three, his widow, Elizabeth (Campbell) Bogle, her son Andrew, Jr., and her daughter Mary. This youngest child of Andrew and Elizabeth, Mary Bogle (called Polly in her father's will), was born in Virginia on May 5, 1785, just before her family started off for their new home below the French Broad. Lacking a few months, her whole life was spent in the little valley between Bays Mountain and Chilhowee. There on Sept. 16, 1819,¹⁷ she was married, as his second wife, to William McTeer, born June 14, 1780, another son of Robert and Agnes (Martin) McTeer. William and Mary McTeer became the parents of four sons, two of whom died in infancy, and a daughter Mary, who never married.¹⁸ William McTeer, a veteran of the War of 1812 was a farmer on his father's Ellejoy homestead. He was distinguished for his honesty, his forthrightness, and the sincerity and vigor of his personal convictions;¹⁹ he was Deputy Sheriff, Justice of the Peace, and a member of the Blount County Court for many years. His death occurred on May 29, 1862, and that of his widow, Mary (Bogle) McTeer on Nov. 16, 1866; both are buried at Eusebia.²⁰

For more than twenty years after the marriage of her second daughter, Elizabeth (Campbell) Bogle continued to live with her son in the log house near Eusebia Church. Andrew Bogle, Jr., who was born in Rockingham Co., Va., Nov. 6, 1781, was never married; he died at Ellejoy, Tenn., on Dec. 13, 1842, age sixty-one years and one month.²¹

His mother was then past ninety-four years old, a tired, frail old lady, sometimes too confused to remember all her grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Yet other days, spring days, as she sat and looked out beyond the mountains, Elizabeth remembered long ago and far away in York County in His Majesty's Province of Pennsylvania, almost seventy years ago, when she and young Andrew Bogle were married at her father's home. On winter nights when the wind blew, Elizabeth recalled again the long winter on Shade Mountain, when Andrew was away with the militia and she, with little Annie and two young boys, was left to fend for herself, and for her new son. Now "little Annie" was a gray-haired woman, and Joe, born that long ago February night, would soon have grandchildren of his own.

Sometimes, in her rocker by the hearth, Elizabeth could feel again the sway and lurch of the wagon, hear the creaking axles and smell the dust on the long road up the Shenandoah Valley. That journey had been an endless struggle, day after day, in heat and cold, in rain and hail, in sickness and foreboding, in hope and exultation; then it had seemed that no land could possibly be worth all the weariness and discomfort of the trip. Yet here was a rich country, where she and Andrew had made a good home for themselves, for their children, and now for grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

But that was long ago, of all those who had come along the Big Road and on down the Old Indian War Trace, only she and Sam, her brother-in-law, and "the children" were left. So, mindfull of things past, and in consideration of things yet to be, on Feb. 2, 1843, Elizabeth Bogle wrote her will,²² naming her eldest son Joseph Bogle, as Executor of her estate, and leaving of "such worldly goods as it hath pleased God to bless me with", "to my granddaughter Levinia Bogle one bed, bedstead, and furniture,"²³ and to "my beloved daughter Ann, now the wife of Martin McTeer one bed, bedstead and furniture, two milk cows, one gray mare, and one hundred dollars in money."

Increasingly now, in her declining years, Elizabeth Bogle's horizons were shrinking to the limitations of her own existence, to food, warmth, rest and the quiet companionship of her daughters and grand-daughters. Her days were spent in simple comfort with little care for either the want or the abundance of legal tender. The statements of her relatives that she was entitled to a government pension as the widow of a Revolutionary soldier seemed strange, foreign and very far away. When Andrew marched off to Lancaster sixty-five years, more than a life-time ago, he had gone in defense of his homestead, his family and his Cumberland County frontier community. He had done what he could, when and where he was needed. Now a distant Congress, of a country then unknown, proposed by law to pay for those services.

Nevertheless, because the family urged and because, after all Andrew had believed in government by representation, Elizabeth, at long last, agreed to apply for a pension. By November of 1844 the application was ready. Her brother-in-law Samuel Bogle and her son-in-law William McTeer had got together what records they could and had coaxed her to remember the dates of her husband's militia tours and the names of his officers. But, it was all so long ago, and it was so hard for her to remember!

Finally, the papers were made out and sent in; then, later, on Feb. 6, 1845, there were additional declarations from Elizabeth Bogle and Samuel Bogle, together with the following affidavit: "Richard Williams, senr, being first duly sworn according to law, doth on his oath depose and say that he is not either directly or indirectly interested in the result of the claim of Elizabeth Bogle, widow of Andrew Bogle, for a pension under the 3rd Section of the Act of Congress, passed July 4th 1836, and he further deposes and says that he is now 77 years of age, and became acquainted with Andrew Bogle and his wife Elizabeth, about fifty-six or fifty-eight years ago in Blount County, then North Carolina now Tennessee, that he continued to be intimately acquainted with Andrew Bogle and his family to the time of his death and that he is intimately acquainted with Elizabeth, widow of the said Andrew Bogle, that he believes her to be in the ninety-seventh year of her age; that she is a credible person and a woman of the highest respectability and integrity, that he has frequently conversed with her late husband, whose credibility was undoubted, about his services in the Revolutionary War; that he believes the statements of the widow to be correct, and that the said Andrew Bogle was reputed and believed, in the neighborhood in which he resided at and before the time of his death, to have been a Revolutionary soldier, and that he concurs in that opinion," signed Richard Williams.²⁴

These supplementary documents were sent to the Commissioner of Pensions with an accompanying letter from Montgomery and William McTeer, which said in part, "We trust the evidence of Samuel Bogle sufficiently establishes two terms of service of (Elizabeth Bogle's) late husband, each believed to be of six month's duration which is sustained by the evidence of Richard Williams."²⁵

But what was sufficient evidence for the East Tennessee friends and neighbors of Elizabeth Bogle was not enough for the authorities in the Federal Government; her pension application was refused with the notation, "not six months service established in this case."²⁵

However, for the applicant herself, this refusal made little difference; perhaps she never knew that the country for which her husband fought had declined to acknowledge their debt for his services. On Sept. 4, 1845, at the age of ninety-seven years and six months, Elizabeth (Campbell) Bogle passed away and was laid to rest in Eusebia Burying Ground beside her husband, Andrew Bogle, farmer-soldier of the Revolution and pioneer of Blount Co., Tenn.²⁶

The fire burns low when evening's sun has set
 Into a bleak and starless night,
 Where cousin's hand to cousin's sword is met
 In wounds that only time can mend;
 Nor spring's bright sunrise ever quite forget.

Corrections and Additions to "The Peter Kepler Family" as published in DSCR Magazine

Vol. XVI, No. 2, page 44. Add an eleventh child, a son, to the children of John George and Mary Magdalene (Shaeffer) Peiffer. According to the Revolutionary War pension file of John George Peiffer, R 8078 (R.G.15) "On May 15, 1802 we moved away from our first place of residence and took up our domicile in Crawford county, Blumfield township. When God gave us another young son, who due to weakness, saw the light of this earthly world only for one year and nine months. In 1810 we again moved from our domicile and now live in Crawford county, Mead township."

Vol. XVI, No. 4, page 97. Number 10. George P.³ Kepler married Barbara LeFever.

Vol. XVI, No. 5, page 131, second line. George W. Kepler married second, Caroline Robertson, daughter of John P. and Lovinia Robertson. She was bpt. Aug. 1853, First Presbyterian Church, Ashtabula, Ohio. Their son was Frank C. Kepler.

Vol. XVI, No. 5, page 132. Add to the children of Cora Forbes Hicks and William Eleroy Curtis, a son George Kepler who died young. Courtesy of Mrs. William L. Springer.

Vol. XVII, No. 2, page 48. Children of Grace Cora (Blystone) and Charles H. Ingram should be:

- 214.1 1. Cornelia Margaret⁵, b. July 15, 1888, Eau Claire, Wis.; graduate of Vassar.
 214.2 ii. Kate⁵, b. April 2, 1890.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS BURYING GROUND, FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP
FULTON COUNTY, OHIO
Contributed by Mrs. Everett E. Spring, Wauseon, Ohio

In 1836 the widow and children of Bethuel Borton came from Burlington Co., N.J., and located, briefly in German Township, and then in Franklin Township, Fulton Co., Ohio. There they organized the Society of Friends and Job Borton gave land for a meeting house and burying ground. The present meeting house, built in 1850 to replace an earlier log structure, is located one half mile south of the West Franklin Methodist Church. The following inscriptions were copied in 1952 from the stones in the burying ground adjoining this church.

REPORT OF MEETINGS

Roy E. McFee

An eager audience filled the auditorium at our January meeting to hear Miss Helen H. Ellis, Assistant Chief of the Burton Historical Collection. She spoke on "New Ways to Bring the Family Tree Up to Date," giving a review of genealogical works recently added to the Collection. Standing behind the speaker's table loaded with books, manuscripts and microfilms, she held them up one at a time and explained their use and importance.

First was the American Genealogical-Biographical Index, by Fremont Rider. Those four volumes are the first part of an enterprising project to incorporate with additions the material of the earlier 48-volume set, American Genealogical Index, by the same author.

Other indexes were: N.Y. Geneal. and Biog. Record, Subject Index to Vols. 39-76; Index to Baptist Encyclopedia, by Elizabeth Hayward; and Michigan Biography Index, by Frances Loomis.

Special lists were these: Revolutionary Pensioners for 1813; Church Records at Connecticut State Library; and Historical Collections of the Michigan Pioneer and Historical Society.

Newly added guides were: Handy Book for Genealogists, by Walter M. Everton; Search and Research, by Noel C. Stevenson; and Guide for Genealogical Research, by Archibald F. Bennett.

Census records can now be sought in: U.S. Census of 1850 for Bedford Co., Tenn., by Lucy Kate McGhee; and Eighth Census (1860) of Shiawassee Co., Mich., by the U.S. Census Office.

Six Michigan D.A.R. publications were included, mostly manuscripts. Two were Miscellaneous Genealogical Records, and one was Genealogical Records of Michigan, New Jersey and New York. Two others were Cemeteries of Allegan Co., Mich., and Vital Records, Detroit. The sixth one was Master Index of Genealogy in the D.A.R. Magazine for Vols. 1-84 (1892-1950).

Abstracts of Registers of Father Patrick O'Kelly, 1842-1856, by George L. Hammell, can be referred to for records of parishes in Livingston, Oakland and Ingham Counties, Michigan.

Quabbin, the Lost Valley, by Donald W. Howe, tells the history and genealogy of a valley submerged by a reservoir to provide water for Greater Boston. In its pages live again noble people flooded from a beautiful countryside which had been theirs for three centuries.

Next came microfilms, the miracle way of keeping records. Miss Ellis explained first the 1830 Census Records of Maryland, Vermont, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Virginia (to include present day West Virginia). She followed with Michigan Census Records for 1840 and 1860, and Census Records of Van Buren County, Michigan, for 1840 and 1850.

Still others were: Irish Marriages, 1771-1812, by Henry Farrar; Louisiana, or Lewis Letters, the whole periodical to supplement three volumes of indexes previously owned; and heretofore missing Parts 4 and 6 of Humphreys Family in America, by Frederick Humphreys.

One final item remains to be mentioned: Clark's Famous 250-Year Perpetual Calendar, which gives the day of week for any date in a period covering a quarter of a millenium.

At our February meeting an audience reverent in mood crowded in to hear "The Family and Background of Abraham Lincoln." The speaker was Mrs. Adrian Wallace Humphrey (Emily L. Lynch) whose father was a third cousin of the Civil War President, through the Hanks line.

The Lynch farm, where Mrs. Humphrey grew to womanhood, is in the Lincoln and Hanks country in Southern Indiana. There she early came to cherish the family traditions. Indeed, her father bore a striking resemblance to President Lincoln and had many of the same traits, while she herself has often been told that she shares family features with the Great Emancipator.

When Thomas Lincoln moved his family from Kentucky toward an eventual home in Illinois, he crossed the Ohio River to the Indiana shore and settled first in a spot now known as Lincoln City. There Nancy Hanks died and was buried. Along that route came other Hanks households and related Sparrows. Today, at Lincoln City, one may visit Nancy Hanks Lincoln Memorial Park. There on a knoll Nancy Hanks lies near others of her family with Hanks and Sparrow names. One couple resting there is Levi Hanks and Lydia Hall, great-grandparents of Mrs. Humphrey.

Abraham Lincoln was nine years old when his mother died. Later his father went back to Kentucky and returned with a new wife, Sarah (Bush) Johnston, who became a much loved step-mother to the young boy. A dozen years still later the Lincolns moved on to Illinois, and Abraham was another step nearer the White House and the moral leadership of a nation.

Colorfully the speaker wove into the narrative the drama of the Lincoln side of the family. Samuel Lincoln in 1635 came from Hingham, England, to Massachusetts. A branch of the Lincolns moved down the Atlantic seaboard to Virginia, where history finds Captain Abraham Lincoln, grandfather of the President. He was slain by Indians in Kentucky, and his three sons, Thomas, Josiah and Mordecai, later found homes in Illinois.

Mrs. Humphrey gave an intimate picture of the Lincoln and Hanks families, an inside glimpse of pioneer people destined to loom large on the pages of history.

THE POOLE FAMILY
Contributed by Clare J. Poole

This Poole family originated in New Jersey but scattered, some members coming to Michigan. The contributor's ancestor was Jeremiah Pool born May 3, 1820, who married Clarissa Hart in 1847 and came to Michigan three years later. Jeremiah Pool died May 13, 1886. In March, 1890 Clarissa Pool, his widow, received a letter from John D. Caufield of Morristown, N.J., administrator of Susan G. Pool asking information on the brothers and sisters of Susan G. Pool and the children of those deceased. This letter together with a few additions to the list remains in the hands of the contributor, who is trying to reconstruct this whole family and would welcome any inquiries or information.

SOMETHING NEW HAS BEEN ADDED

In response to inquiries from both far and near, and in furtherance of the objective set forth in our constitution "to pool interests and to aid individual members in the compilation of their family genealogies," your Society is undertaking this spring a new project. You have all received (and we hope returned) cards soliciting your cooperation in the organization of a membership list which will give for each participant his code number, his mailing address and three surnames on which he has or seeks genealogical information. It is our hope that this list will facilitate correspondence between members with like interests, and so promote exchange of data and cooperative research.

On this project, the very considerable responsibility of preparing, mimeographing and distributing is in the hands of a Special Joint Committee composed of Miss Sarah Van Hoozen Jones, Chairman, Miss Alice Serrell, Miss Maude Hathaway representing the Membership Committee, with Mrs. Raymond Millbrook, Mrs. Clinton Hathaway and Mrs. Ralph Franklin from the Publications Committee. As soon as completed, the lists will be sent at cost (25 cents) to members who have placed their orders, accompanied by remittance to Miss Jones, 1005 Romeo Rd., Rochester, Mich. The response of the Society and their appraisal of the results will determine whether this shall be an annual or a terminal venture. Have you ordered your list?

LETTER TO JENNY HUNTER

Dear Jenny:

When you have finished with the probate records you want at a county seat, your next step is to look up the custodian of land records (usually the Register of Deeds, County Recorder or County Clerk) and see what can be found there. In most states, deeds were recorded by county units, except towns in Connecticut, Vermont & Rhode Island and parishes in Louisiana. All deeds, after the first patent, are recorded in the local unit.

The two basic types of land records are those of original entry and of subsequent transfers. Under the first, you will find warrants, surveys and patents. A warrant was sold or given to an individual or company, to confer a right to a certain amount of land with the actual place not specified. Then a survey was made setting out the boundaries. And finally, a patent or deed of actual ownership was given to the first-comer. In the 13 original states, also in Vermont, Maine, Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia and Texas, such records are in the Secretary of State's or State Land Office. In the so-called "public domain states", surveyed or created after the Ordinance of 1785, such data is available at the Bureau of Land Management in the Dept. of Interior or the National Archives in Washington. Some counties have "tract books" showing the original owners.

However, records of later transfers are more numerous and usually more productive of genealogical information. Sometimes the only satisfactory data on record about an early pioneer is in the land transfers. Deeds showing the name of the grantor's wife -- "to my beloved eldest son, for love and affection" -- by a guardian listing all children and heirs-at-law of the deceased -- deeds contingent upon the grantee's supporting "for the rest of their natural lives" the grantor and his wife -- may be most helpful. One quarter of a loyalist's house in Connecticut was subject to his mother's dower and could not be sold; therefore we identified both of them. Check deeds, if only to confirm data found elsewhere.

Timothy Briggs of Dutchess County, N.Y. made a will in 1825, leaving specific bequests to two nephews; "all residue to the use or disposal" of his beloved wife Sarah; and after her death, "the remainder, share and share alike" to one nephew's two children. Two years after the will was probated, six deeds were recorded, each covering 1/6 interest in "land left undisposed by will" and thus claimed by Timothy's brothers and sisters or their heirs. With the identity of one brother known, these deeds helped to identify Timothy and two other "unknowns" and to add three new families for a total of 18 individuals in six counties.

In the land office your first step is to examine grantor and grantee indexes for the names you want. There are several schemes of indexing; the key to each is usually found in the inside front cover of the binder. In a smaller, older county, you may find one binder with grantees and grantors on facing pages. Other counties use many volumes for each.

You may want a worksheet similar to the one suggested last time for probates. Headings are suggested in this order, so that you may fill in data as you read the deed: Name; Reference; Date Executed; Grantor; Grantee; Consideration; Conveying ...; Date Acknowledged; Witnesses; Date Recorded. Localities of grantor and grantee may indicate migrations. Check signature against Grantor for spelling and name of wife (if any). Gifts may be specified or hinted by a nominal consideration. The fractions of ownership do not always mean that many owners or heirs. Lapses between execution and recording may be significant to you. Witnesses may be interested parties or officials in charge.

It will not always be necessary to copy an entire description. In the 29 "public domain states" land is accurately described by ranges and meridians or subdivisions and is easily identified in later transfers. You may only want acreage and locality and sometimes the names of adjoining owners. In the older states, where boundaries of land holdings were indicated by references to natural objects, such as "Phineas Stone's barn", a crooked beech sapling, a large boulder by the stream, etc. -- and you find that the barn has burned, the beech tree disappeared and the stream dried up -- you can appreciate why there may be uncertainty regarding legal titles and accurate boundaries of such holdings surveyed by "metes and bounds".

You won't realize how much you value or depend upon deeds until you learn that "all records were destroyed by fire in 1804" or perhaps you are asking for deeds in "Rensselaerwyck" where farms were leased by the patroon. You may be lucky and find an index to the lease at the N.Y. State Library, but they don't have them all. You might find an assignment or renewal some years later. You are also apt to find that the lease just ran for a hundred years or so and you are still wondering who paid the rent.

After you have your deed records, sort them in various ways by the names of the individuals, by time schedules, by localities. Shuffling the deeds often brings out the needed clues. You often find important data in the land records, "deed you do!"

NOTES OF THE SOCIETY

Imitation is the sincerest flattery; so we take pride in Roy McNaughton's wish to organize a genealogical society in St. Petersburg, Fla...and Mrs. Lance Adam's hopes for a gathering of kindred spirits in the Grand Rapids area. . . Since Miss Ellen Symington of Ashland, Ore., feels an organization across the state is better than none at all, she plans to drive up to visit the Portland Genealogical Forum.

From Portland, Ore., to Portland, Me., is only a small matter of between three and four thousand miles, five hours by jet, which observation leads us to a genealogical suggestion. Did you Down-Easters know that The Portland (Me.) Sunday Telegram publishes a column of genealogical notes and queries under the editorship of Mr. Richard M. Hallett? When all else fails, you might give it a try. Our thanks to Mr. Harry Nims for this information.

WELCOME TO OUR NEWCOMERS: Mrs. Adrian Wallace Humphrey, whose recollections of the Lincoln country we were privileged to hear at our February meeting. . . Mrs. P. B. Davis of Charleston, Ill., the Editor's Mother, who has a long-time interest in the Strodes of Virginia and the Coons of York Co., Pa. . . Miss Wilda T. Chase of Loup City, Neb., who is assistant assessor for Sherman Co., Neb. What a fortunate occupation for a genealogist, right among the records!

It's always a pleasure to mention the genealogical publications of our members: Some Descendants of John Keand of Whithorn, Scotland, many of whom lived and died in Paris, Bourbon Co., Ky., and were known as McCanns, by William R. and Robert L. McCann of Hopewell, Va.; Descent from Benjamin Randal and Roxanna Case, of Sharon, Vt., and St. Armand, P.Q., by Florence Randal Livesay and J. Melville Warwick of Corunna, Ont. . . Also a special accolade to our good friend Roy McFee, who has added a new accomplishment to his repertoire with the appearance of his sonnet entitled "Joseph Brant" in the Winter 1953 issue of Inland Seas, the publication of the Great Lakes Historical Society.

Our winter travelers have made up in distance what they lack in numbers. . . While President and Mrs. Reves were enjoying a vacation in Texas, the February meeting was left in the able custody of Vice-President Kepler. . . The William C. Hudsons have been more than busy lately with a New Year's trip to Bermuda and a son recently admitted to the Bar. . . Mrs. Frances Chase combined business with pleasure on her Christmas vacation in New York City.

VITAL STATISTICS: Seems Dr. Mudd of Saginaw will soon need to publish a supplement to include all the recent additions to his Mudd Family Genealogy; the latest grandchild is Linda Kay, daughter of Lt. and Mrs. Richard D. Mudd, Jr., of Greenville, Miss. . . We tender our condolences to Mr. Frank Kepler, on the recent death of his cousin and partner in genealogical research, Mr. Charles Jacob Kepler of Eau Claire, Wis. (#96. in last February's installment of The Peter Kepler Family).

Our faith in human nature always gets a boost from those good souls who patiently copy off local records for the benefit of future genealogists. . . Mrs. Monteith of Martin, Mich., writes that she is now typing up an eighty-seven page report, plus index, on the early residents of Allegan Co. (a special orchid for that index!). . . Mrs. George Corliss of South Haven is copying marriages, deaths and early land patents for Van Buren Co. (and working half time besides!). . . Another of our outstate Michiganders, Mrs. Leo Sheehan of Battle Creek, has been active recently in conducting a genealogical workshop for the Battle Creek Historical Society.

VISITORS TO BURTON: Perhaps we Detroiters just don't appreciate our opportunities. . . Mrs. Lena Munson of Canandaigua, N.Y. spent a day recently in our library. . . Mr. Colket of the National Archives (no less) did some heraldic research on two local families while he was here last September.

"Help Somebody Today" a good motto for genealogists. . . Through Kendall P. Hayward, our Connecticut specialist, Mr. William C. Hutchins of Albuquerque, N.M., has finally succeeded in untangling his Hutchins family. . . Mr. Walter F. Wright of Detroit met in these columns Mrs. William Kelley Wright of New Hampshire; now both are busily stalking their joint progenitor Alvin Wright.
